Copyright and Licensing

Copyright and Publication Rights

Authors retain copyright in their work. Upon acceptance, and by means of the publication agreement, authors grant Logeion the right of first publication together with a non-exclusive, worldwide licence to publish, reproduce, distribute, and make the article available in print and electronic form. This includes publication through the journal's website and distribution through third-party publishing platforms, databases, aggregators, indexing and preservation ser-vices, as well as inclusion in the journal's printed annual volume.

Open Access and Creative Commons Licensing

Logeion is a Diamond Open Access journal. No submission, article-processing, or publication fees are charged to authors.

Unless otherwise indicated, articles are published under the Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivatives 4.0 International licence (CC BY-NC-ND 4.0). At the author's request —for instance, where required by a research funder— an article may instead be published under the Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International licence (CC BY 4.0). The licence applying to each article should be indicated in the published version and in the corresponding online metadata.

Author Reuse and Self-Archiving

Authors may deposit the published version of their article in institutional or subject repositories and may make it available on personal or institutional webpages, provided that the original publication in Logeion is properly acknowledged and that the DOI and the applicable Creative Commons licence are included. Any third-party material contained in the article remains subject to the rights and restrictions stated in the relevant credit line.

Third-party Rights and Permissions

Authors are responsible for obtaining any permissions required to reproduce third-party material, including photographs, figures, tables, maps, audiovisual material, or other copyrighted content. Permissions should normally cover:

- non-exclusive rights to reproduce and distribute the material as part of the specified article and journal;
- worldwide rights;
- print and electronic publication, including use on the journal's website;
- distribution through third-party publishing platforms, databases, aggregators, indexing and preservation services;
- all media and formats relevant to publication and scholarly dissemination; and
- the full term of copyright, without a time limitation.

Permissions restricted to the print edition alone, or subject to a limited period of use, are not acceptable. Authors must comply with any attribution, credit-line, or other conditions imposed by the relevant rights holder and must provide evidence of permission to the journal when requested.

Third-party Material and Creative Commons Licences

The Creative Commons licence applying to an article does not extend to third-party material included in that article unless this is expressly stated. Material reproduced by permission from a third-party rights holder must carry an appropriate credit line identifying the source, the rights holder where applicable, and any restrictions on reuse. Anyone wishing to reuse such material is responsible for obtaining any further permission required, unless the proposed use is otherwise permitted by law or by a separate licence applying to that material.
